WHAT IS WATER FOR.

Water is so common we hardly think f it. To begin with, water was God's milder of the world, as we see it. The tocks were mud and aand made by water and laid down by it, one kind on the top of another. Coal, made of plants, was sovered up by water, so that the rotter charts were kept there and changed into bool. Veins of lead, copper, gold, silver, systals, were cracks in the rocks, filled with water that had these precious hings dissolved in it. And water, as ice glaciers), ground up rocks into earth, in shieh plants can grow, the sea and treams helping to do the work. Water milds plants and animals, too. Three parters of what they are made of is trading for minor office are responsi- vater. When you pay 20 cents for a seek of potatoes you are really paving 15 of the cents for the water in the pota ocs. A boy who weighs eighty pounds f perfectly dried up, would weigh only wenty pounds. And there could be no sotate nor boy without water. It must lissolve things to make them over into iew things, and it carries them where hey are wanted to build the new things soften food, and then as watery dood carries the food to every part of he body to make new flesh and iones, hat we may grow and have strength. It arries the plant's food, also, up into the dant. And water carries man and goods boats, and, as steam, drives his cars, t makes the whiels go in his factories, t is a great worker, and we could not et along without it. And it makes such of the beauty in the world. Ask our friends how it does that ?- Conregationalist.
